WHY RABBITS LIVE IN BURROWS

“LOOK,” said Roscoe Raccoon, pointing off into the distance.

“I don’t see anything,” said Pat Parrot, “except some dirt flying in the air.”

“Yes,” said Roscoe, “but who do you think is making the dirt fly?”

“Well,” said Pat. “It could be any one of a number of people. Sammy Squirrel digging up a nut; Dozer Dog burying a bone; Willie Woodchuck scooping out his winter quarters; or Roger Rabbit making a new burrow. For a guess I’d say it was Roger.”

“Why?” asked Roscoe Raccoon.

“Because Sammy Squirrel just went upstairs for a nap; Willie Woodchuck finished his new home yesterday, Dozer Dog has a tooth-ache, and wouldn’t be interested in bones,” said Pat. “Therefore it must be Roger Rabbit.”

As Pat finished speaking, up out of the hole came a furry pair of long ears, followed by their owner, Roger Rabbit.

“You win,” said Roscoe.

Hearing the voices, Roger Rabbit came over to the foot of Pat’s tree. Looking up, he saw Pat and Roscoe sitting on a limb. Then suddenly, he ducked.

“Look out above!” he shouted.

Down through the branches of the tree above Pat’s and Roscoe’s heads, a ball of grey fur came tumbling. It bounced from one branch to another, and finally landed on the grass near Roger Rabbit with a thud. Then, and not until then, did Sammy Squirrel wake up!

“Wow!” said Sammy, feeling the lump on his head. “What a nightmare! It made me fall out of bed, something I never did before in my life.”

“What did you dream about?” asked Roscoe Raccoon.

“I dreamt I was a rabbit,” said Sammy. “Dreamt I was living under the ground, and was just reaching for a carrot, when Whoops, I fell out of bed.”

“What’s wrong with being a rabbit?” asked Roger indignantly.

“Nothing maybe, but I’d rather be a squirrel, and if there’s one thing I hate to eat—it’s carrots. And just dreaming that I was living under the ground gave me a touch of rheumatism.”

“Pooh,” said Roger. “It’s cool down there in summer, and warm in winter, what more can anybody want?”

“That’s not the reason that rabbits live underground, is it Pat?” asked Roscoe Raccoon.

“Of course not,” said Pat. “I can tell you the real reason—Why Rabbits Live In Burrows.

“It all began away back millions of years ago in the time of Roger's great-great ancestor—Rip Rabbit. Rip, like all the other rabbits in those days did not live in a hole in the ground. He lived in a tree, like any other self-respecting rabbit.

"Why, you may ask, did rabbits live in trees? Well, simply because at that time, carrots grew in trees. And where you find carrots you will find rabbits.

"But there was one peculiar thing about those tree-dwelling rabbits, and Rip didn't find about it until he was half grown. Before that, his parents wouldn't let him out of the tree-hole in which he was born, and for a very good reason.

"One day, his father decided that Rip was big enough to be told about the facts of a rabbit's life. He reached into the hole, grabbed Rip by his big ears, and pulled him out. Rip blinked a little in the strong daylight, and then exclaimed:

"'My—what a big world!'

"'Not as big as it looks,' said father. Anyhow—as far as you're concerned, it isn't so big.'

"'Why, what's wrong with me, pop?' asked Rip.

"'Well, for one thing, you're a rabbit. This tree, and only this tree is your world. You were born in it, and you'll live in it all your life,' said Rip's father.

"'But suppose I don't like it here,' said Rip. 'Or suppose I want to visit some other rabbits in some other trees.'

"'Forget about that notion—quick,' Rip's father said. 'Because if you ever leave this tree, you're done for. You see—us rabbits cannot climb trees! We can hop from one limb to another, but we can't climb up or down a tree-trunk. Look down—you'll see it's forty feet from the ground to the first limb. If you should fall off or jump off, that would be the end of you.'

"'But what would happen to me down there?' asked Rip.

"'The squirrels would get you,' said his father.

"'What are they like?' asked Rip. 'Would they gobble me up?'

"'I've never seen one,' said his father. 'But I hear they're very strange creatures. They live in holes in the ground!'

"Without saying any more, Rip's father reached out for some carrots, and started his lunch. He offered one to Rip, but Rip decided to get his own for the first time.

"Rip hopped out along the limb, and saw a big juicy carrot, with flowers growing out of it, right on the very tip of a branch. He reached for it—grabbed it—and CRACK went the branch.

"Down went Rip to the ground with a Kerplunk, still clutching his carrot. He grabbed the carrot between his teeth, made for the tree-trunk, and started to try to climb. But he couldn't get off the ground. His father was right—rabbits couldn't climb trees! He was grounded!

"Rip backed up about thirty feet, hoping that a running jump would get him started up the tree. Just as he was on the mark, set to go, he slipped and fell into a hole in the ground.

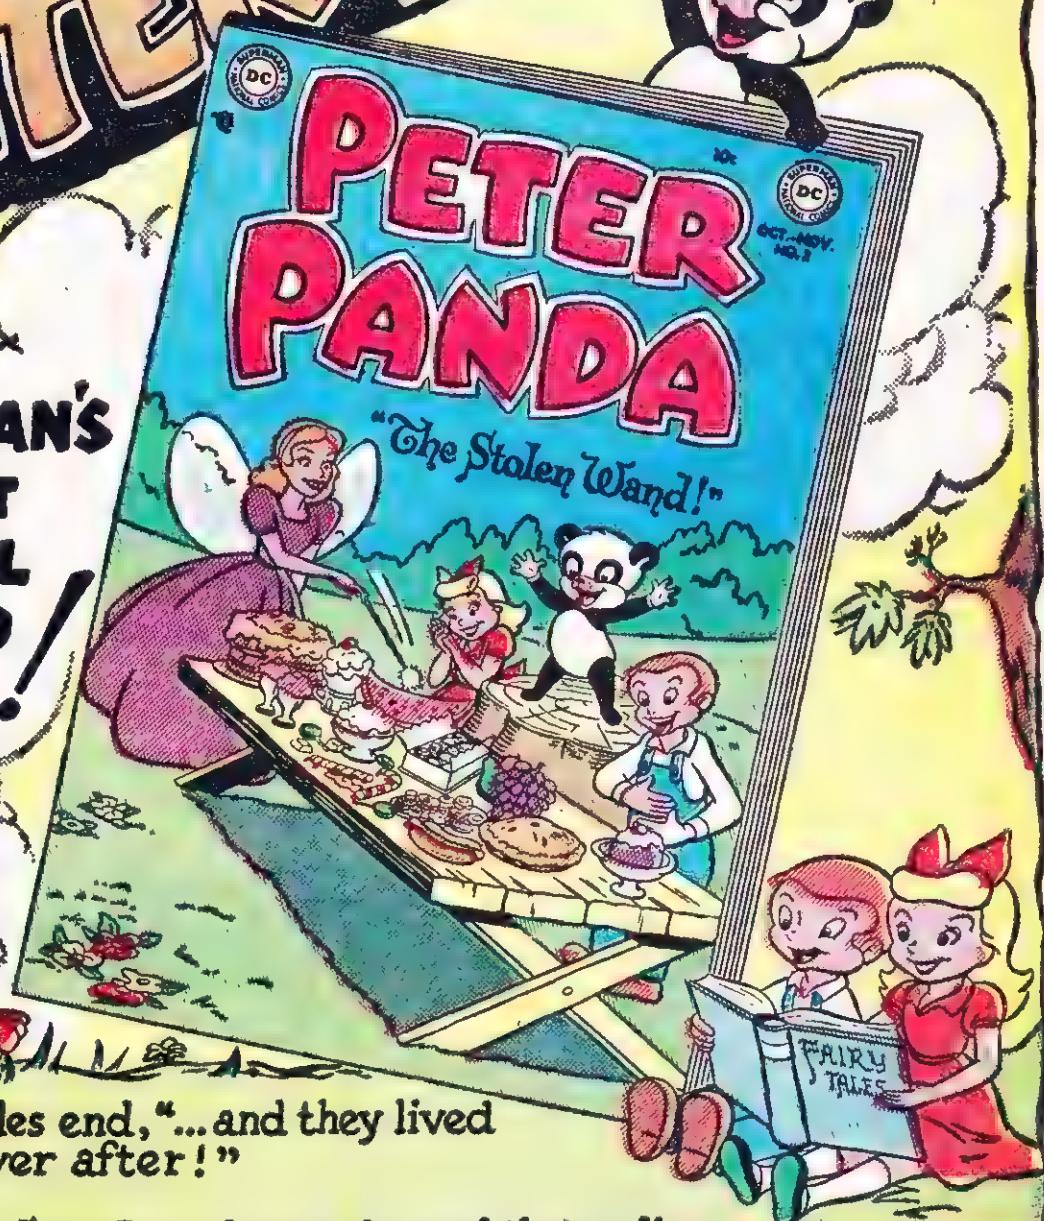

"Well, to make a long story short," said Pat Parrot, "that's how it was that squirrels came to live in trees, rabbits started living in burrows, and carrots started growing in the ground."

"But—" said Roscoe, Roger and Sammy.

"Well, Rip fell into a squirrel's hole. The squirrel told Rip how nice it was living under ground, and Rip told the squirrel how nice it was living in trees. Each convinced the other that they should swap living quarters, and they did, and that's the way they live to this day. Rip planted the seeds from the carrot flower. And since then, people and rabbits have eaten the roots of the carrot plant. Naturally, they never grow up to be carrot trees any more."
